

KITES

DIANA FAGEN JOHNSON

Bad, bad BUBBA was a naughty, mean kite.

He liked to knock down every kite in sight.

And when the March winds began to blow ...

... the children got ready to let their kites go.

Bubba'd bobble them and wobble them till down the kites fell.

It was then that the children began to yell.

"Never you mind," their mothers did say,

"It's new kites you need. We'll buy them this day!"

But before bad Bubba could blink an eye,

All the new kites blew into the sky.

KITES

There were dog kites, and cat kites, and monkey kites, and rat kites, and bear kites, and tiger kites, and lion kites, too.

The children even shouted, "It's a real kite zoo!"

Bubba flew at them in such a kite rage that he tangled his kite string right around his kite tail.

The children all watched as Bubba fell down.

Bubba's string was in knots, and his tail was gone.

The new kites were safe now, and that ends our tale.
